

Essays on his own times Volume 3

This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1850 edition. Excerpt: ... ments, which most flatter his hatred to this country, and most tend to confirm him in the ruinous effects of his anti-commercial system to the resources of the British empire. That he will find himself grossly mistaken in the end, we have little doubt; but as little that he at present fully builds on its ultimate success. His language to the merchants deputed from different parts of France, you wonder at my severity; but if you knew what I know, you would be much severer,--seems capable of no other interpretation. Unless, therefore, either his pride or his ambition have suffered some very irritating repulse, we suspect that he would piece out the lions hide with the foxs skin, temporize, and even make some sacrifices, rather than break up the totality of his continental system, and suffer the north to open again its ports to the British flag. On the other side, his disasters and disgraces in Spain may have created such a sensation in France against him, as even he, with all his brutal contempt of the opinions of his slaves, may deem it prudent to overdazzle by altering the scene, and (as he no doubt anticipates) the fate, of the war. Robert Waithman, Esq. AT the special court of common council, convened on Thursday for the purpose of voting thanks to Lord Wellington, Mr. Waithman (as our readers saw) added new glories to his former character for intrepidity of assertion, and hardihood of countenance more impenetrable than Goliah, and covered with armour of the same metal. Having first taken a view of the convention of Cintra-- having omitted the victory at Vimiera, the fruits of which, if its hero had been allowed to gather, the convention of Cintra would never have taken place, or have been a name of glory and national exultation;...
