

Gettysburg (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from GettysburgThe account of the of Gettysburg, as set forth in these pages, is, so far as human knowledge can determine, absolutely correct. The writer, while an active participant in the great struggle during the three days of its continuance, does not lay claim to having been actively identified with all the movements herein recorded. He cheerfully acknowledges his indebtedness to several eminent historians of the battle from both North and South, whose facts he has blended with his own experiences and observations into a complete and unprejudiced narrative. He takes especial pride in saying that his mind was, in writing this little history, entirely divested of any sectional feeling, and that his main purpose has been to do equal credit and reflect equal honor on the gallant men of both armies who faced each other in deadly strife on this memorable field. With his countrymen of the South he cheerfully accepts the verdict on the justice of their cause which they submitted to the adjudication of the sword, and he sincerely trusts that the developments of time will never again create the necessity for the men of either section of the United States to be found fighting under any flag other than the emblem which is now the symbol of our happily united country.About the PublisherForgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
